

BETH RUNS FOR TAMWED

Beth Teverson is running the London Marathon on April 22nd for Tamwed.

She is raising funds for projects focusing on the health and welfare of indigenous tribal women living in remote villages in the Nilgiri Hills of South India. These women urgently need support. A recent survey found nearly 70% of breast-feeding and productive-age-group women were suffering from severe anaemia. More shockingly, each village was home to an average of ten destitute widows, with children suffering from hunger and starvation, and without proper clothing. Employment opportunities for these women are limited, and it can take four hours to reach the nearest town. Together with the ISLAND Trust, Tamwed will provide practical solutions to help these communities break out of a cycle of deprivation.

Below are examples of how your support will make a difference:

- £20 will buy seeds and seedlings for a home kitchen garden, offering a long-term solution to hunger and malnutrition.
- £100 will buy a sewing machine, giving women an opportunity to supplement family income.
- £120 will cover a year's training and travel for a female community volunteer, who educates her village on matters relating to health, climate change and land rights.

Beth says: "I have been giving my all to the training. I really hope that you'll find it in your heart (and pocket) to support me by donating to Tamwed by any means that you can including Just Giving at: www.justgiving.com/fundraising/tev4tamwed

Tamwed is run by volunteers, 100% of funds received will go directly to the projects listed.
